Memorandum.

The jury arrived the tipstaff at about 6 o'clock that they had agreed upon a verdict. We had instructed them to seal their verdict if they arrived at one after 5 o'clock P.M. and the prothonotary and the court stenographer had gone home. However, counsel for both parties were still in the court house, accordingly we decided to reopen court and receive the verdict at this time in the presence of all counsel, and did so.

When the verdict slip was handed to us, its meaning was patently ambiguous in that it purported to award to the plaintiffs $10,000.00 as the amount of damages due them, plus detention damages at the rate of 6% per annum from June 11, 1958 to August 30, 1960, but it stated that the detention damages were to be computed not upon $10,000.00 but upon $9000.00.

In our charge we had instructed the jury, and had repeated the admonition that, in arriving at the amount of their award, they should first determine the total amount of damages by subtracting the fair market value of the property after the taking from its value before the taking, then subtract $1000.00 from that difference so as to allow credit on the total damages for the $1000.00 admittedly paid to the plaintiffs by the Commonwealth shortly after the taking, then award that amount so arrived at as the principal amount of their verdict, then to compute any detention damages they allowed on that principal amount, add them to it and thus arrive at their total award, but also to set forth separately in the verdict the principal amount and the detention damages. It was obvious from the verdict as originally returned that the jury intended either to award $10,000.00 plus detention damages at 6% per annum on $10,000.00 or $9000.00 plus detention damages on $9000.00 but the verdict slip did not show which of these two was intended.

Accordingly, we questioned them in the presence of counsel for both parties, in open court, first if they had subtracted the value after from the value before taking and had arrived at $11,000.00, and then deducted $1000.00 from that sum to arrive at their award of the $10,000.00 damages set out in the slip? Several of them shook their head no, and the foreman stated they had not mentioned the sum of $11,000.00.

Then we asked them if they had subtracted the after value from the before value and arrived at $10,000.00 and then had deducted the $1000.00 credit from that amount to arrive at the $9000.00 mentioned in the slip and several wedded their heads yes. We then asked them the same questions again and all of them agreed that 10,000.00 was the total damages before deducting the 1000.00 credit and that they had deducted the 1000.00 from the 10,000 to arrive at the 9000.00 mentioned in the slip. We thereupon amended the verdict slip by drawing a line through the 10,000.00 and writing 9000.00 over it and by writing that appears on the slip. Then we read the slip as amended to them twice and all of them agreed that it set forth their intention correctly.

We asked attorney Culbertson, the defendants attorney, and attorneys Pope and Barco, plaintiff's attorneys, if they agreed that the verdict as amended was now correct. Mr Culbertson said that he agreed, but Messrs Pope and Barco said that they did not agree. We asked them to suggest what we should do or inquire further in order to correct the verdict while the jury was still there. All three attorneys come to side bar and Mr Pope said that he agreed that the verdict slip as we had amended it, correctly set forth what the jury intended to do, but that he questioned their method of arriving at the deletion damages in view of the evidence. We told him that he was free to raise that question later and that, in asking him if he agreed that the verdict as amended was correct, we only desired to know whether he was satisfied that the amended verdict slip set forth correctly what the jury intended to do. He and Mr. Barco replied that they were satisfied that that was true. Mr. Culbertson said the same. We thereupon discharged the jury.
